

“I chose Axon for three reasons”

says Radius Health Group CIO, Steven Mayo-Smith:

“Because I wanted independent advice.
Axon is agnostic and not the sales arm
of another organisation.

Because Axon has a great reputation.

And because I believe that I can have a relationship with Axon that’s not just about what’s in the contract. It’s about sharing a vision and working together
to make it happen.”

A former CIO of the Auckland District Health Board, and now CIO of Radius Health Group, Steven Mayo-Smith has recently selected Axon to provide an IT platform that will integrate eighty companies – in 100 locations nationwide – into a single group. The state-of-the-art new infrastructure deploys virtualisation technology for software as well as servers, with Microsoft’s application virtualisation technology, Softricity, streaming Microsoft applications to users on demand.
